

Marcela D. Radtke

Marcela is a doctoral candidate at the University of California, Davis studying nutritional biology with an emphasis in cognitive neuroscience. Her research focuses on the physiological and cognitive consequences of food insecurity in the college student population. Marcela is pursuing a PhD/MD degree to merge nutrition research and clinical practice in underrepresented populations through analyzing diet quality and health-related biomarkers with the goal of expanding and improving food access resources.