

RUTH ADEWUYA, MD, CHCP, MEHP Fellow

Education Leader. Innovator. Podcast Host

With over a decade of experience in educational leadership and innovation, Dr. Adewuya brings a proven track record in managing medical education programs, fostering interdepartmental collaboration, and driving strategic initiatives to enhance the continuum of medical education. Her expertise spans accreditation, faculty development, learner support, and program innovation, leading and advancing initiatives aligned with organizational excellence.

Her tenure as Managing Director of the Stanford Center for Continuing Medical Education leverages her expertise to lead the strategic planning and execution of CPD initiatives. Overseeing a diverse range of teams and projects from accreditation to instructional design, ensuring that medical professionals receive the highest quality of education through varied formats, be it in-person, online, or blended learning environments. Additionally, she serves as the Executive Director and faculty for the Physician Leadership Certificate Program and Advanced Practice Provider Leadership Certificate Program, which focuses on providing participants with an evidence-based framework for personal growth, key management and leadership skills, and deep connection with peers.

Prior to her current role, I contributed to the American College of Chest Physicians as the Director of Learning and Development, where I implemented groundbreaking strategies for professional advancement. Her academic experience as an Assistant Professor of Pharmaceutics (Affiliate) at Roosevelt University College of Pharmacy has been foundational to her belief in the power of education as a catalyst for clinical excellence.
